

Assessment Date: ____/____/____ Student: _____ Examiner: _____
Words Read Correctly (WRC): _____ Errors: _____ Notes: _____

To Kill a Vampire

Hy Conrad

The witch and the young Sherlock Holmes left their car in a parking lot and made their way along Center Street toward the police department's annual party. During the rest of the year, the witch was better known as Carol Bixby, an officer in the city's major crimes division. And the crime solver was her twelve-year-old son.	17 31 47 59
"What if there's a homicide?" Jonah asked. "Are the detectives all going to show up in costume?"	75 76
Carol whacked him playfully with her broomstick. "That's right. Napoleon and Frankenstein will be on the case. And Sherlock Holmes, of course."	87 98
It was October 31, and a festive assortment of ghouls and ghosts strolled the streets. Adding to the fun were the decorations--paper skeletons stapled to doors, plastic cob webs and comical tombstones. Jonah and his mother were taking a shortcut down an alley when they saw that someone on the third floor had placed a Dracula dummy in a chair on a balcony, with a stake through its heart.	113 127 141 158 168
"Mum," Jonah said, tugging on her sleeve. His face was suddenly ashen. "That's not a stake--it's a corkscrew. And that's not a dummy. It's a real man."	183 196
As they looked on, the door opened and a zombie and a gypsy woman stepped out on the balcony. The gypsy woman smiled and touched the corpse on the shoulder, then took a closer look at the corkscrew. Her scream was piercing.	213 227 238

The witch and the young Sherlock Holmes left their car in a parking lot and made their way along Center Street toward the police department's annual party. During the rest of the year, the witch was better known as Carol Bixby, an officer in the city's major crimes division. And the crime solver was her twelve-year-old son.

"What if there's a homicide?" Jonah asked. "Are the detectives all going to show up in costume?"

Carol whacked him playfully with her broomstick. "That's right. Napoleon and Frankenstein will be on the case. And Sherlock Holmes, of course."

It was October 31, and a festive assortment of ghouls and ghosts strolled the streets. Adding to the fun were the decorations--paper skeletons stapled to doors, plastic cob webs and comical tombstones. Jonah and his mother were taking a shortcut down an alley when they saw that someone on the third floor had placed a Dracula dummy in a chair on a balcony, with a stake through its heart.

"Mum," Jonah said, tugging on her sleeve. His face was suddenly ashen. "That's not a stake--it's a corkscrew. And that's not a dummy. It's a real man."

As they looked on, the door opened and a zombie and a gypsy woman stepped out on the balcony. The gypsy woman smiled and touched the corpse on the shoulder, then took a closer look at the corkscrew. Her scream was piercing.